

Optional exercises

Think of a time you recently managed to control your temper. What helped you do that? Was it internal inhibitions (rules you have for yourself), external inhibitions (fear of the consequences) or something else entirely?

What was special about that time that made you able to control your temper on that occasion when you have trouble doing so on other occasions (assuming you do, given you're reading this book)?